Ukrainian Woman at the Australian Open

Three Ukrainian women made it to the Round of 16 at the Australian Open Tennis tournament, one of whom, Dayana Yastremska, made it to the Quarterfinals by defeating Viktoria Azarenka of Belarus, a former Australian Open Champion, in straight sets, 7-6 & 6-4. Here is Yastremska's post-match interview. During the interview, Yastremska mentioned that during recent Russian attack a rocket landed on her Grandmother's house.

The second Ukrainian, Marta Kostyuk, is already in the Quarterfinals. Tonight, U.S. East Coast Time, Kostyuk plays the American, Coco Gauff, for a place in the Semi-finals. I'll be suspending my normal support for American players, for this one match.

Unfortunately Elena Svitolina, Ukraine's most decorated player, had to withdraw during her 4th Round match due to injury.

I take particular pleasure in watching the Ukrainian women defeat their Russian and Belarusian opponents, as Yastremska did against Azarenka, and then refuse to shake their hands at the end of their matches. It has happened often, and it never gets dull. Judging from the number of Ukrainian flags in the stands, there is a great deal of support for Ukraine.

Davos Review/Anders Aslund from the Kyiv Post

According to Anders Aslund's account there appeared to be several Ukrainian themed events at Davos, along with the continued presence of Ukraine House that has become a Davos institution. Aslund mentioned 2 over-arching themes:

- There is a building consensus of the need to confiscate frozen Russian Central Bank reserves, for re-purposing to fund both Ukrainian reconstruction and weapons purchases.
- The need for Europe's defense industries to prepare for a long war. The same should be said for the defense industries of both the United States and Ukraine.

If there is a lesson to be drawn from the continuing debate in the U.S. Congress over military support for Ukraine, it is – don't rely on the United States. The United States has been continually late, starting with at the beginning of Russia's latest invasion when the United States shipped a total of 90 Javelin missiles to stop the Russians, to continual delays in responding to Ukraine's requests for additional weapons, from M777 howitzers to F-16s, and now the unseemly debate in Congress that we witness today.

Hitting Russian Oil Storage Facilities

Over the last few days Ukraine has been hitting several oil & gas storage facilities inside Russia, most recently a major facility near St. Petersburg. The Latest Denys contains a fascinating account of the Ukrainian strike near St. Petersburg. Some highlights:

- 1:15 into the video – the infrastructure that was damaged or destroyed was mostly produced in Germany. With sanctions, the destroyed and damaged equipment will be more difficult to replace.
- 2:20 into the video – Denys reported that Russia evacuated the tankers that were tied up at the port at the time of the strike. One of the ships was named the Ocean Appilon. According to Denys the tanker is quite new, launched in 2019. It sails under Liberian registry, owned by a company in Singapore and operated by a company in Greece.

- 3:00 into the video – The destination of the tanker was listed as a port in the Netherlands. So much for Western sanctions on Russian oil exports.
- 3:25 into the video – Last month Ukraine attacked the largest Russian export terminal, Novorossiysk on the Black Sea. There are rumors that Pres. Zelenskyy got a warning from Ukraine’s western allies to stop attacking Russian oil export infrastructure. Given the destination of the aforementioned Ocean Appilon, the rumors just might be true.

If the rumors are true, it appears that Ukraine has gotten fed up with Western warnings about attacking Russian oil export infrastructure. Ukraine is continuing to develop more capable long-range UAVs capable of hitting targets deep inside Russia, and doing considerable damage in the process. I wouldn’t be at all surprised if Ukraine attempts to hit oil ports on the Russian Pacific Coast, if not via UAVs then by sabotage.

“More Ukrainian Strategic Strikes”/by Mick Ryan via Substack

Some excerpts:

- (Deep Strikes) “allow Ukraine the time to reconstitute its army, through training, equipment replacement and standardisation, rest and rotation, as well as potentially mobilising new troops and formations. It also permits time for rebuilding of Western defence industry, and the conservation of resources this year so they can be built up and then expended in 2025 offensives.”
- “Western strategy must shift from resourcing the ‘defence of Ukraine’ to resourcing the ‘defeat of Russia’. Without such a change in strategy and resources, it is difficult to see a resolution to this war that is both just and enduring for the Ukrainian people.”
- “As such the strategic strikes in Russia, in Crimea, against Russian military operational infrastructure and maritime strikes in the Black Sea will be vital shaping activities in the coming year.”

Ryan goes on to describe what he calls the “strike complex,” that includes:

- “Support the achievement of Ukrainian operational and tactical activities. An example of this might be the recent downing of the Russian air force A-50 Mainstay command and control aircraft this month.”
- “Enhance Ukraine’s strategic freedom of maneuver. This freedom of maneuver is not exclusively military. A good example of this is the attacks on the Black Sea Fleet. This has led to the Russian fleet being less effective in the western reaches of the Black Sea. Consequently, it has permitted the Ukrainians to reopen a maritime trade corridor which is essential to their grain export operations – and earning foreign currency.”
- “Engage in economic warfare and to degrade Russian industrial capacity. Examples include two recorded strikes on the Mashinostroeniya Design Bureau in Kolomna, which develops missiles and anti-tank guided missiles. Ukraine is also reported to have recently attacked gun powder factories in Bryansk and Tambov and other locations. Another example is the recent strikes on Russian oil storage and export facilities.”
- “Serve important political purposes. The 2023 strikes on Moscow using drones, the Kerch bridge, airfields and even railway tracks within Russia were calculated to paint a picture of Russian military and political incompetence for the Russia people. This is intended to keep political pressure on Putin and demonstrate to Russian citizens that the war is not going their way. It is not clear that this is having a major effect (yet).”

Conclusion – “Ukraine’s maturing strike complex is an extraordinarily impressive achievement and will have a vital role to play in Ukraine’s 2024 military strategy. It will provide some breathing space for the Ukrainian Armed Forces, will help attrit the Russian forces and assist in Ukraine achieving some of its strategic influence objectives.”

Ukraine’s improving deep strike capability brings the prohibition of U.S. weapons used by Ukraine to hit Russia increasingly into question.
