President Zelenskyy Comes to Washington

What's the purpose? Is it to rally the U.S. Congress to vote for US aid to Ukraine which, by virtue of the schedule of meetings to be held tomorrow, including another meeting with U.S. senators, and meetings with the House Leadership, seems to be the stated objective?

Or, instead, is the purpose what people like to call a "Come to Jesus" meeting with President Biden and other Administration officials, with the objective of influencing Ukraine to accept a negotiated peace with Russia? Garry Kasparov, in his Op-Ed in today's Wall Street Journal, entitled "Victory Seems Not to be an Option for Biden," likely concludes it's the latter. Some excerpts:

- "It's convenient for Mr. Biden that MAGA Republicans oppose aid to Ukraine; he can blame them for his failure to deliver. While it's true that Congress is playing politics with American credibility and Ukrainian lives, so is Mr. Biden, who has the power to arm Ukraine today if he wished. The tanks, ATACMS, big drones and jets that Ukraine needs to win the war are collecting dust in American warehouses instead of destroying the Russian military."

- "Remarks at the Halifax Security Forum by Estonian Defense Minister Hanno Pevkur and others strengthened my belief that the U.S. is deliberately allowing the Russian occupation to continue. Two vital arteries feed Vladimir Putin's army and enable his occupation: the Crimean land bridge and the Melitopol railway. According to several analysts, a single barrage of properly loaded ATACMS could destroy both and starve Mr. Putin's invading army of supplies. Withholding these armaments is a choice."
- "My great fear is that Mr. Biden's envoys are now discussing with Mr. Putin the partition of Ukraine along the current front lines."
- "I predict Biden will offer Ukraine NATO membership for the unoccupied parts of Ukraine as a carrot to coerce President Volodymyr Zelensky into accepting this unholy partition. A considerable part of Russia's frozen assets in the West—held as a bargaining chip by Mr. Biden—could be given to Ukraine as a sweetener."
- "If Mr. Biden armed Ukraine for victory, Mr. Putin wouldn't survive long. His downfall would cripple a circle of thugs and terrorists from Caracas to Tehran. It's also possible that Russia as it exists today wouldn't survive. So what? Recall that many foreign-policy experts, including President George H.W. Bush, attempted to preserve the Soviet Union out of fear of what might happen if it fell. I'm grateful they failed."
- "The end of the Russian mafia state would be a mortal blow to the forces of terrorism and tyranny. Israel and Ukraine are fighting the same fight. The Biden administration should be doing everything possible to help them win instead of holding them back.”

What Mr. Kasparov fails to mention is that if Pres. Zelensky accepted the terms described in his article, Ukraine’s government would almost certainly be the object of a popular uprising, another Maidan, and it would fall within 48 hours. There will almost certainly be massive resistance in Ukraine to the deal Kasparov described, likely ending any chance of NATO membership for Ukraine. Ukrainians would then begin a guerrilla war against Russia that NATO would be powerless to stop and, in the end, Russia would be driven out of Ukraine.

There is a separate prediction that I saw today that Russia will be able to re—stock their army in 3-5 years. Who’s next?

Being the optimist that I am, I predict that Congress will pass the Administration’s funding request, but I’m still concerned about the scenario described by Kasparov and, if Kasparov is right, the Biden Administration doesn’t understand the consequences.

- Political scientist Oleg Sahakyan believes that Putin is waiting for the results of the US elections, because he is convinced that it will open a new window of opportunity for him.

- "I believe that discontent in Russia itself is influenced not so much by their elections as by the elections of the US president. Decisions on mobilization in Russia will be made in accordance with the dynamics of the election process in the US.
- The Kremlin needs to wait until the elections in the USA. Before that, they will play the theme of truce, negotiations, constructiveness, etc. And after the elections in the USA, the window of opportunity for Putin may open. He hopes for it and wants to take advantage of it," Sahakyan explained.

11:49 PM: "Trump may turn to Putin and react differently than we expect," - political analyst Volokh

- Karl Volokh, a political analyst and blogger, told how Trump's return could affect Ukraine's war with Russia
- "Donald Trump promised that if he becomes the president of the United States, he will bring order to Ukraine's war with Russia. But it is quite likely that if Trump becomes president, he may turn to Russian President Putin, get a not very positive answer and react completely differently from us we expect from him today," he said.
- According to him, in such a case, ex-president of the USA Donald Trump can suddenly change the point to the opposite and take a tougher position.
